PREFACE

The more important acts of congress relating to the government of the territory now comprising the state of Illinois and the organic or fundamental laws adopted by the state after its admission to the union have never been published in one compact volume. In view of the fact that the people of the state of Illinois, on November 5, 1918, cast their votes in favor of calling a constitutional convention, it seems desirable that such a volume should be published. The purpose of this publication is to make the acts of congress providing for the government of the territory now embraced within the state of Illinois, the Ordinance of 1818, and the three state constitutions more accessible to those who wish to acquaint themselves with the provisions of these documents. This volume, however, does not contain all the acts of congress relating to the government of the territory now constituting the state of Illinois. Only the more important of these acts are reprinted.

The acts of congress as they appear in this volume have not been compared with the original instruments. A comparison has been made, however, with the acts as they appear in the official compilations of the statutes of the United States. The original manuscripts of the Ordinance of August 26, 1818, and the three Illinois constitutions are on file in the office of the secretary of state and the texts of these documents as they appear in this volume have been compared with the original manuscripts. The amendments to the Constitution of 1870 have also been compared with the official texts on file in the office of the secretary of state.

Many of the provisions of the constitutions of 1818, 1848, and 1870 have been construed and applied by the supreme court of this state. It seems desirable that the decisions of the supreme court interpreting the provisions of the three state constitutions should be noted. Each of the three constitutions is divided into articles and sections. Under each section as it appears in this compilation there are set forth the supreme court decisions which construe or apply that provision. No attempt is made, however, to list all the decisions of the supreme court bearing on constitutional questions. Only those cases which are deemed leading cases in the construction and application of the provisions of the three state constitutions are cited. In making the annotation of cases volumes 1 to 281, inclusive, of the Illinois supreme court Reports have been consulted.

A full and complete index to the Constitution of 1870 has been prepared. It has not been deemed necessary, however, to index the constitutions of 1818 and 1848, since the table of contents will serve for that purpose. Obviously, the present constitution will be consulted more frequently than the two preceding constitutions.

A brief account of the constitutional history of Illinois has been added for the convenience of the reader. For assistance in this work I wish to express my indebtedness to the editor-in-chief, Clarence W. Alvord, and his assistants, Miss Ruth E. Hodsdon, Miss Leila O. White, and Miss Margaret Doherty.

In the preparation of this volume I have received many valuable suggestions from Major W. F. Dodd, Secretary of the Legislative Reference Bureau.

HISTORY OF THE CONSTITUTIONS

SPECIAL INTRODUCTION

THE CONSTITUTIONS OF ILLINOIS

When in ¹⁷⁸⁴1784 the state of Virginia ceded to the United States title in the County of Illinois, claimed by right of colonial charter as well as by conquest and possession, she turned over to the young nation no inchoate wilderness but a region which had been known for nearly a hundred years and which had, for almost as long, had a definite government as a part first of the French and then of the British empire. After her brief period of sovereignty, then, Virginia found it necessary, in ceding her claims to the federal government,¹ to specify the condition "that the French and Canadian inhabitants, and other settlers of the Kaskaskies, Saint Vincents, and the neighboring villages, who have professed themselves citizens of Virginia, shall have their possessions and titles confirmed to them, and be protected in the enjoyment of their rights and liberties."² Thus was the past given its claim on the government of the region which was one day to become the state of Illinois.

It was some little time before the United States undertook the formal organization of the country of the Illinois and the rest of the territory which constituted the national domain. Finally, on July 13, 1787, only shortly before the substitution of the United States constitution for the Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union, congress passed an ordinance "for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio.”³ This act, upon which was based the whole system of American territorial organization, placed the government of the territory for the time being in the hands of a governor, a secretary, and three judges, all to be appointed by congress. All civil officers and all militia officers below the rank of general officers were to be appointed by the governor. The governor and judges acting together in legislative capacity were empowered to adopt such laws from the codes of the original states as they considered useful for the territory. As soon as there were as many as “five thousand free male inhabitants, of full age, in the district,” however, this arrangement was to give way to one allowing the people of the territory to participate in the government; the governor was to be assisted by a legislature made up of representatives elected by the freeholders and a council of five members selected by congress from ten nominated by the territorial house of representatives. This legislature was empowered to make laws not repugnant to the ordinance, subject to the governor’s absolute veto; and to elect, by joint ballot, a delegate to congress, with power to speak but not to vote.

One provision of the ordinance proved a serious bone of contention in the Illinois country: the famous “sixth article” decreeing that “there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.” This was in direct conflict with the confirmation in their “possessions and titles” guaranteed by the Virginia Act of Cession to the inhabitants of the Illinois country, for many of them owned Negro slaves; accordingly the clause in the ordinance was interpreted to apply only to the future introduction of slaves.

The government provided for by the ordinance was set in operation in 1788, with its seat at Marietta. Two years later the Illinois country was given local organization: the eastern half of the present state was included as part of "Knox county," with its seat at Vincennes; the rest was formed into St. Clair county. Later, in 1795, this county was divided and the southern part was organized as Randolph county.

By 1798 the "Northwest Territory" had the 5,000 free male inhabitants necessary to meet the requirement of the ordinance, and accordingly passed into the second grade of government, with a partially representative legislature and a delegate to congress. Almost immediately agitation began for a division of the enormous region comprising the territory, with the result that on May 7, 1800, congress detached the western part (approximately the modern states of Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and the western half of Michigan) and constituted it Indiana territory, with its capital at Vincennes, and its government practically a replica of that formulated by the Ordinance of 1787.⁴

By this time, naturally, there had developed much more political activity among the settlers than had been the case in the early days. Scarcely had Indiana territory started on its separate career than a faction of Illinois men, hostile to the governor and in favor of the repeal of the slavery prohibition, began to urge advance to the second grade in order to reduce the power of the governor and to secure a delegate to congress to press the issue of slavery.⁵ Although Governor Harrison and his supporters exerted themselves promptly and effectually to suppress this movement, they, too, desired the removal of the slavery prohibition and presently resolved to take their chance with a legislature of wider powers such as could only be established with the transition to second grade. Though the other faction reversed its position and opposed the change, the returns of the election on September 11, 1804—held on very short notice and therefore alleged to be a snap vote—gave a very substantial majority in favor of the change.

The new legislature fulfilled the hopes of the governor's faction by passing in 1803 an indenture act which coasted dangerously near, if it did not quite transgress, the irksome "sixth article." But the Illinois faction still was not content; its members wanted nothing less than definite repeal of the article, and they wanted to get more political control into their own hands. Accordingly they began a persistent campaign for the separation of the Illinois country and for the repeal or temporary suspense of the slavery prohibition, which they protested was seriously hampering the process of settlement. At length they succeeded in electing a delegate to congress who was able to secure the passage of an act—on February 9, 1809—constituting Illinois a separate territory, with its western boundary the Mississippi river, its eastern "the Wabash river, and a direct line drawn from the said Wabash river and Post Vincennes due north, to the territorial line between the United States and Canada."⁶

According to the usual practice, the Ordinance of 1787 was followed closely in prescribing the government of the new territory: authority was vested in a governor and three judges until such time as the governor was convinced a majority of the freeholders desired to advance to second grade, when he was empowered to make the change without further ado. In April, 1812, an election indicated that Illinois was ready to take this step; but Governor Edwards wisely delayed effecting the change until he had secured the passage of a law by congress extending the suffrage from freeholders to all free white males of twenty-one years who paid any county or territorial tax and who had had a year's residence in the territory,⁷ and providing that the five councilors should be elected instead of appointed and that the delegate to congress also should be elected by the people, instead of by the legislature. Thanks to these radical changes, when on September 14, 1812, Governor Edwards called for the first election to set in operation the second-grade territorial government, Illinois could boast of having the most democratic form of government of any territory in the United States at the time.

Nevertheless, there was still a feeling of resentment against the governor's absolute veto over the acts of the legislature as well as against his appointive power and other checks on the popular will. Repeated appeals to congress for redress bringing no results, it appeared that advance to statehood was the only way out of the "despotism" of territorial government, and leaders watched hopefully the mounting numbers of immigrants. In November, 1817, definite agitation for Illinois' immediate admission to statehood was set on foot; and so expeditiously was the matter pressed that on January 23, 1818, the Illinois delegate laid before congress a memorial from the legislature of the territory asking that it be authorized to take the necessary steps preparatory to statehood; at the same time he introduced an enabling bill.⁸ Congress did not take up the matter until April 4; in less than two weeks, however, the two houses reached an agreement on the final provisions, and the president signed the act on April 18, 1818.

Following out these provisions, the voters of the territory elected delegates to a constitutional convention; and on August 3, 1818, there assembled at Kaskaskia the body which was to draw up the first organic law of the state of Illinois. Basing its work largely on the constitutions of New York, Kentucky, and Ohio, the drafting committee of the convention framed a brief instrument consisting of a preamble and eight articles, and after spending only twelve days discussing and modifying it the convention adopted it and adjourned on August 26.

The convention's work was not submitted to the voters for ratification but became operative with congress' admission of Illinois to statehood on December 3, 1818. The government it formulated observed the traditional American principle of distribution of power among three departments, legislative, executive, and judicial. The legislature was to be a bicameral assembly and to hold biennial sessions; the executive power was vested in a governor. The judiciary was to consist of a supreme court and such lower courts as the legislature might establish; all judges and justices were to be appointed by joint ballot of the legislature. Instead of giving the governor a veto power as a check on the legislature, the constitution provided for a council of revision, which was to consist of "the judges of the supreme court or a major part of them together with the governor" having power to revise all bills and return those of which it disapproved, together with its objections, to the house where they originated. A wide suffrage was provided, all male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age whether citizens or aliens, being qualified to vote after six months' residence in the state.

The framing of the article dealing with slavery produced more discussion than any other, for the convention was between two fires: on one hand was the necessity of avoiding conflict with the Ordinance of 1787 prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude; on the other, disinclination to interfere with the property rights of those who owned slaves or who held indentured servants under the "evasive" territorial law of 1803. The clause as finally adopted was designed to eliminate all forms of slavery and indenture gradually and so passed congress; but once Illinois had come into full statehood the proslavery elements began to nourish the hope of opening the door wide to slavery by a constitutional amendment.

The Constitution of 1818 made such a procedure none too easy. The vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to the general assembly was necessary to recommend to the voters the calling of a convention, and a majority of the electors must then vote in favor of the step before the legislature could proceed to order an election of delegates; if a convention was called, its work had to be ratified by popular vote before going into effect. After a bitter struggle between the slavery and antislavery factions, the general assembly in 1824 voted to give the voters a chance to express themselves on the subject of a convention, but popular sentiment failed to follow this lead; and on August 24, 1824, the people voted to leave the constitution untouched.

During the next twenty years, however, the state expanded so rapidly in population and in interests that the first simple constitution was hopelessly outgrown, and the need of a revision became too obvious to be ignored. After an abortive effort in 1842 to have a convention called, the assembly laid the matter before the voters in 1846, and this time public opinion was overwhelmingly in favor of the move. The convention met in June, 1847, and spent nearly three months devising a new instrument; the following March its work was ratified by a large majority of the voters; and on April 1, 1848, it became operative.⁹

Broadly speaking, the trend of the changes made was in the direction of curtailing the powers of the legislature and enlarging those of the people. All state and county officers were now made elective, as were also the judges of the supreme court, who no longer served for life, but only for a stated term; further, the number of judges was fixed at three, this as a protest against the legislature's abuses of its appointive power for partisan purposes.¹⁰

⁹ Post, p. 51, n. 1; also John Moses, Illinois, Historical and Statistical, 2 v. (Chicago, 1892), 2:553 ff.

¹⁰ In 1841, when the democrats were in control of the legislature, three of the four justices of the supreme court were whigs; the general assembly therefore made use of its power to increase the number of justices by appointing five new judges, all democrats.

The number of representatives and state officers was reduced, and the sessions of the assembly were practically limited to forty-two days by a provision for cutting the pay of the members in half after that length of time.

Unrestrained by the constitution framed in the pioneer days of 1818 the legislatures of the twenties and thirties had brought the state to the verge of bankruptcy by creating and giving credit to a succession of unsound state banks and by embarking recklessly on a scheme of internal improvements. On a grandiose scale the state had undertaken to equip the state with railroads and to give it a water connection from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. The Illinois-Michigan canal finally surmounted a long series of tribulations and achieved some measure of the success of which its creators had dreamed; but the railroad scheme proved a disastrous fiasco. The state debt was piled so high it seemed it never could be paid off, and state credit was very seriously impaired. So hopeless did the situation seem that there were suggestions of repudiating the whole debt, but such a course was for the time being averted in 1842 under the leadership of Governor Ford.

Naturally, public opinion desired particularly that the convention of 1848 should make such disasters impossible in the future, and its expectations were fully met. The legislature henceforth could not contract debts for the state in excess of $50,000, unless the voters ratified a specific law to that effect; and it was forbidden to grant the state's credit in aid of any corporation or association. It was also forbidden to extend the charter of any state bank or other bank then existing, and any law passed by it in regard to the incorporation of banks had to be ratified by the voters before it could become effective.

Not even in the matter of official salaries was the convention willing to trust the general assembly; instead it fixed the salaries of all state officers and judges in the constitution. To make it a matter of fundamental law that the governor should receive an annual salary of $1,500, the supreme court judges $1,200, the state auditor $1,000, and the secretary of state and state treasurer each $800, was obviously absurd; even in those days of small things such sums were parsimonious, and in any case, no matter how great the need for economy, it was hazardous to make so inflexible the compensation of the officers of a rapidly growing commonwealth.

In contradiction to the democratic nature of most of the changes made the new constitution restricted the existing franchise, requiring citizenship and a year's residence instead of merely the six months' residence stipulated in the old constitution. This of course meant the disfranchisement of alien inhabitants and met with great opposition on the part of the foreign elements in the state, particularly the Germans.¹¹

The desire for effective government prevailed over the old-time fear of a strong executive in so far as to do away with the cumbersome council of revision and to substitute in its stead a limited veto power for the governor. Amendment to the constitution, further, was made somewhat easier; under certain restrictions the general assembly might propose changes directly instead of calling a convention for the purpose, but such changes could not become effective until approved by the voters.

One of the most significant changes was in the system of local government. The early settlers of the state had come from the south where the county was the unit of local government and where there was no township organization. The new settlers from the northern states, however, were accustomed to some form of township government, and it was at their instigation that a provision was inserted in the new constitution directing the general assembly to enact a general law authorizing any county whose voters favored it to adopt the township system.

¹¹ Centennial History of Illinois, 2:408.

Like its predecessor, the Constitution of 1848 made the mistake of failing to look far enough into the future. Its framers had neither the imagination to foresee the results of the tremendous changes in the state which were even then beginning nor the wisdom to make a flexible instrument capable of adapting itself to any new situation. By 1860 the population of the state was more than double what it had been when the constitution was framed, and industrially and socially it had made amazing progress.

Two points in particular drew persistent fire, the fixed salaries of state officers and the loopholes still left open for the passing of private and special laws. In spite of a provision in the second constitution that a private or local law should deal with but one subject which "shall be expressed in the title" and in spite of a stipulation that only general laws could be passed with reference to divorces, township organization, and the formation of corporations, the number of special laws mounted steadily; and in each session of the general assembly a large share of the time was given over to the consideration of private bills, often of the most trivial character, which came so thick and fast that proper consideration of them was impossible. As the length of the sessions was limited, the pressure of business of this sort seriously hampered the consideration of public measures, and many bills were delayed, ill-considered, or never considered at all.

Such obvious evils, it might be supposed, would have required but little agitation to remedy; but during the fifties people's attention was being concentrated more and more upon the slavery issue and the course of political events in the nation at large, and interest in state affairs flagged. In 1856 the general assembly submitted a proposal to call a constitutional convention, but the voters rejected it; and not until four years later was a new proposal made. This time the people ratified it, and accordingly in the latter part of 1861, seventy-five delegates were elected for a convention.

The group which assembled at Springfield on January 7, 1862, for the purpose of revising the constitution, however, placed a most peculiar construction on its powers. Chosen on party lines in the first heated weeks of the war of secession, a clear majority of the members were democrats, and they could not resist interpreting their election as an expression of the people's disapproval of the republicans and the republican methods in the conduct of the war. They were accordingly not content to stop with modifying the constitution along partisan lines—in particular arranging an apportionment whereby the smaller southern counties, democratic, were given equal representation with the larger republican counties in the north—but, assuming legislative powers, undertook to ratify a proposed amendment to the federal constitution, to redistrict the state for congressional representatives, to issue bonds, and to promulgate ordinances and resolutions instructing state officials; furthermore it even undertook to investigate and criticise Governor Yates' administration, particularly with respect to military affairs. This last move, together with its delay in acting upon resolutions commemorating northern victories, brought upon the convention the charge of disloyalty; and all factors combined seriously to discredit the body in the eyes of a large part of the voters. Accordingly, although the constitution it framed in its three months' session had much real merit, the instrument was rejected by an overwhelming majority of the voters.¹²

The conditions which in the first place had led to the calling of the convention, however, became more and more intolerable. The special legislation evil in particular grew to alarming proportions, and with the rapid industrial development which came immediately after the war the objectionable feature of fixed salaries became more and more absurd. Further, the need of reorganizing the judiciary had become acute, for the growth of the population and business had necessarily led to a marked increase in the amount of litigation to be disposed of by the courts. The general assembly, had it chosen to exercise its constitutional power to establish additional circuit courts and to create prosecuting attorneys in each county, might have relieved the situation considerably; but it could not constitutionally add to the number of supreme court judges, and it was the supreme court that especially needed relief.

As soon, then, as the cessation of war released people's attention from the national events which had been absorbing it, a fresh attempt at constitutional revision was made. In 1867 the legislature adopted a resolution in favor of calling a convention; it was promptly ratified by the voters and in November, 1869, eighty-five delegates were chosen to frame a new body of fundamental law. The convention assembled on December 13, 1869, and continued in session until May 13, 1870. In July its work was ratified by the voters and on August 8 went into force. Of the three constitutions under which the state has operated that of 1870 has had the longest life, having, with few modifications, continued as the organic law of the state up to the present year, 1918.¹³

A more complex document in many ways, it improved decidedly upon the Constitution of 1848. The fixing of state salaries was made a matter of legislation, subject only to the limitation that the salary of no person in office should be affected during his term of service. The power of the general assembly to pass special laws was radically curbed, twenty-three specific subjects being removed from the field of possibility.

The judicial system was reorganized by increasing both the number of judges and the courts. The number of judges of the supreme court was increased to seven; appellate courts were authorized after the year 1874; the number of circuit courts and circuit court judges was increased; county courts for each county were established; probate courts were authorized in certain counties; state's attorneys for each county instead of each judicial circuit were provided for; provision was made for the election of justices of the peace and police magistrates. Additional courts, furthermore, were provided for Cook county, where the rapidly growing city of Chicago was raising a host of special problems.

The powers of the executive were extended in several ways, chiefly by the enlarging of the governor's veto power. Whereas before a mere majority of the members of the general assembly could pass a bill over the chief executive's veto, the new constitution required that two-thirds of all the members elected to each house should definitely record their votes in favor of such a vetoed bill before it could be effective.

In an effort to break down the sectionalism which characterized Illinois politics, the convention introduced the innovation of "minority representation." The southern counties, of southern sympathies and extraction, had long been solidly democratic; the northern and eastern counties of New England and New York extraction, were almost as solidly republican. To change this block alignment, the state was divided into fifty-one districts, each of which was entitled to elect one senator and three representatives; in the case of the election of the latter each voter was given three votes, which he might cumulate for a single candidate or distribute among two or three candidates. In this way the electors of a minority party, casting more than one-fourth of the votes in a senatorial district, could by cumulating their votes make certain of electing one member to the lower house.

The franchise, after a hot debate in the convention, was given to citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, to all electors in the state in 1848, and to all foreigners who had obtained a certificate of naturalization prior to January 1, 1870; all, however, must fulfill a moderate residence requirement, one year in the state, ninety days in the county, and thirty days in the election district in which they cast their ballots.

Two provisions reflected clearly the bitter experience of the state with the railroads. At the time, many counties and cities were facing financial disaster as the result of having purchased thousands of dollars worth of the capital stock of railroad corporations which had subsequently failed or had been sold out by the speculators who first organized them. The convention, therefore, deemed it wise to forbid all counties, cities, and other municipalities to become subscribers "to the capital stock of any railroad or private corporation" or to become indebted in excess of five per cent of the value of the taxable property within their territorial limits.

The other provision was more startling in principle and dealt a more direct blow at the growing strength of corporate privilege in the state. Serious complaint had been made of the extortionate rates charged by the railroads, but the convention for some time hesitated to deal with the matter, doubting its competency to authorize legislative control and convinced that the only regulation possible was by competition. Eventually, however, it came around to another point of view and vested in the legislature the power of regulating railroad rates.

Like the Constitution of 1848, that of 1870 made possible its own amendment by a convention assembled at the mandate of the voters or by amendments proposed by the general assembly and ratified by the voters. A very serious limitation was put upon the latter method, however, by the provision that no more than one article could be amended at one time nor any article oftener than once in four years. The constitution thus made the same mistake both its predecessors had made of applying a well-nigh inflexible body of law, supposedly organic but in fact largely statutory, to a developing commonwealth whose needs were constantly changing. Inevitably, the new constitution had hardly gone into effect before the cry for modifying it began to be heard.

For two decades the general assembly was able by proposing separate amendments from time to time to satisfy the most insistent demands. In 1878 its proposal to give the drainage districts power to levy special assessments was made part of the constitution; in 1880 the voters ratified an amendment with reference to the election and terms of office of county officials; and in 1884 a much needed revision gave the governor power to veto items in appropriation bills, instead of having to veto such bills in their entirety because of some single objectionable item. A fourth amendment, adopted in 1886, was designed to prevent the commissioners of the penitentiaries and reformatories from making contracts for the labor of the inmates of such institutions.

Four years later, the article forbidding municipalities to contract debts in excess of five per cent of their taxable property was found to work a hardship on Chicago, which greatly desired to issue bonds in aid of the World's Columbian Exposition but could not because its debt limit had already been reached. A constitutional amendment, therefore, relieved the situation by authorizing the city to issue bonds up to five million dollars in excess of its ordinary debt.

This series of amendments remedied only the most immediate and obvious deficiencies of the constitution, leaving many more fundamental problems untouched, so that by 1893, there was a feeling in many quarters that the constitution was a stumblingblock in the way of almost all reform. The need of a thorough revision of the revenue system and the judiciary seemed especially imperative; the framers of the constitution, furthermore, had never dreamed of the complexity of governing a city as large as Chicago had grown to be, and its provisions were constantly proving more and more inadequate for that municipality. Nevertheless, persistent agitation for a constitutional convention, carried on for a decade, proved fruitless: downstate jealousy of Chicago, the opposition of the interests which were profiting from the status quo, and the natural conservatism of the mass of the people continued to foil repeated attempts to get a resolution calling a constitutional convention passed by the general assembly.

By 1902 such efforts seem to have been practically given up as hopeless, and energy was directed rather to securing the passage of single amendments. Thus in 1903 the general assembly proposed and on November 8, 1904, the voters ratified an amendment permitting the legislature to pass local or special laws with reference to the "local municipal government . . . of Chicago," and modifying the constitutional provisions relating to the judiciary of Cook county so that justices of the peace of the county should be limited in their jurisdiction to the territory not embraced in the city of Chicago.

A seventh amendment was proposed in 1907 and ratified November 3, 1908, which made an exception to the constitution's provision that the legislature might never "loan the credit of the state or make appropriations from the treasury thereof, in aid of railroads or canals," by authorizing the construction by the state of a canal from Lockport to Utica.

Experience has shown, however, that the passage even of single amendments under the Constitution of 1870 has been anything but easy. The technical obstacles in the way of securing a favorable vote, as has been pointed out, are considerable; and a further difficulty has arisen from the conflict between a number of groups each advocating a particular amendment as the amendment to be passed upon. Many amendments have failed to receive the two-thirds vote of the general assembly; and a number which have been proposed by that body have failed of ratification not because of marked opposition to it, indicated by a majority of votes being against it, but because either the method of balloting or the indifference of the voters made it fail to receive the required "majority of all the votes cast at the election." Since 1908, however, the most serious difficulty has been the multiplicity of demands for amendment: one organization has urged abolition of minority representation, another reorganization of the judiciary, another, short ballot, still others initiative and referendum, recall, woman suffrage, home rule for cities, revision of revenue, or easier amendment to the constitution, until the general assembly is overwhelmed and cannot be brought to take definitive action on any one proposal.

All these difficulties in the way of piecemeal change met with increasingly serious protest, until the leaders of the state were persuaded that a constitutional convention had become "inevitable and indispensable if constitutional revision adequate to the needs of the state" was to be made.¹⁴

SEC. 11. The general assembly, or legislature, shall consist of the governor, legislative council, and a house of representatives. The legislative council shall consist of five members, to continue in office five years, unless sooner removed by Congress; any three of whom to be a quorum; and the members of the council shall be nominated and appointed in the following manner, to wit: As soon as representatives shall be elected the governor shall appoint a time and place for them to meet together, and when met they shall nominate ten persons, resident in the district, and each possessed of a freehold in five hundred acres of land, and return their names to Congress, five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as aforesaid; and whenever a vacancy shall happen in the council, by death or removal from office, the house of representatives shall nominate two persons, qualified as aforesaid, for each vacancy, and return their names to Congress, one of whom Congress shall appoint and commission for the residue of the term; and every five years, four months at least before the expiration of the time of service of the members of the council, the said house shall nominate ten persons, qualified as aforesaid, and return their names to Congress, five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as members of the council five years, unless sooner removed. And the governor, legislative council, and

And all bills, having passed by a majority in the house, and by a majority in the council, shall be referred to the governor for his assent; but no bill, or legislative act whatever, shall be of any force without his assent. The governor shall have power to convene, prorogue, and dissolve the general assembly when, in his opinion, it shall be expedient.

SEC. 12. The governor, judges, legislative council, secretary, and such other officers as Congress shall appoint in the district, shall take an oath or affirmation of fidelity, and of office; the governor before the President of Congress, and all other officers before the governor. As soon as the legislature shall be formed in the district, the council and house assembled, in one room, shall have authority, by joint ballot, to elect a delegate to Congress, who shall have a seat in Congress, with a right of debating, but not of voting, during this temporary government.

SEC. 13. And for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions, are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions, and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory; to provide also for the establishment of States, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the Federal councils on an equal footing with the original States, at as early periods as may be consistent with the general interest:

SEC. 14. It is hereby ordained and declared, by the authority aforesaid, that the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact, between the original States and the people and States in the said territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent, to wit:

ARTICLE I

No person, demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship, or religious sentiments, in the said territories.

ARTICLE II

The inhabitants of the said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits of the writs of habeas corpus, and of the trial by jury; of a proportionate⁴ representation of the people in the legislature, and of judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law. All persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offences, where the proof shall be evident, or the presumption great. All fines shall be moderate; and no cruel or unusual punishments shall be inflicted. No man shall be deprived of his liberty or property, but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land, and should the public exigencies make it necessary, for the common preservation, to take any person's property, or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same. And, in the just preservation of rights and property, it is understood and declared, that no law ought ever to be made or have force in the said territory, that shall, in any manner whatever, interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements bona fide and without fraud previously formed.

ARTICLE III

But if after such reconsideration the said senate or house of representatives shall, notwithstanding the said objections, agree to pass the same by a majority of the whole number of members elected, it shall together with the said objections be sent to the other branch of the general assembly, where it shall also be reconsidered; and if approved by a majority of all the members elected, it shall become a law. SECTION 2. An election for members of the General Assembly shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and every two years thereafter, in each county, at such places therein as may be provided by law. When vacancies occur in either house, the Governor, or person exercising the powers of Governor, shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

Eligibility and Oath

SECTION 3. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, or a Representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-one years. No person shall be a Senator or a Representative who shall not be a citizen of the United States, and who shall not have been for five years a resident of this State, and for two years next preceding his election a resident within the territory forming the district from which he is elected. No judge or clerk of any court, Secretary of State, Attorney General, State's Attorney, recorder, sheriff, or collector of public revenue, member of either House of Congress, or person holding any lucrative office under the United States or this State, or any foreign government, shall have a seat in the General Assembly: Provided, that appointments in the militia, and the offices of notary public and justice of the peace, shall not be considered

Nor shall any person holding any office of honor or profit under any foreign government, or under the government of the United States, (except postmasters whose annual compensation does not exceed the sum of three hundred dollars) hold any office of honor or profit under the authority of this State.

SECTION 4. No person who has been, or hereafter shall be convicted of bribery, perjury or other infamous crime, nor any person who has been or may be a collector or holder of public moneys, who shall not have accounted for and paid over, according to law, all such moneys due from him, shall be eligible to the General Assembly, or to any office of profit or trust in this State.

Members of the General Assembly, before they enter upon their official duties, shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Illinois, and will faithfully discharge the duties of Senator (or Representative) according to the best of my ability; and that I have not, knowingly or intentionally, paid or contributed anything, or made any promise in the nature of a bribe, to directly or indirectly influence any vote at the election at which I was chosen to fill the said office, and have not accepted, nor will I accept or receive, directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing, from any corporation, company or person, for any vote or influence I may give or withhold on any bill, resolution or appropriation, or for any other official act." This oath shall be administered by a judge of the supreme or circuit court in the hall of the house to which the member is elected, and the Secretary of State shall record and file the oath subscribed by each member. Any member who shall refuse to take the oath herein prescribed shall forfeit his office, and every member who shall be convicted of having sworn falsely to or of violating, his said oath, shall forfeit his office and be disqualified thereafter from holding any office of profit or trust in this State.

Apportionment

Senatorial

SECTION 6. The General Assembly shall apportion the State every ten years, beginning with the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, by dividing the population of the State, as ascertained by the federal census, by the number fifty-one, and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the Senate. The State shall be divided into fifty-one senatorial districts, each of which shall elect one senator, whose term of office shall be four years. The Senators elected in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, in districts bearing odd numbers, shall vacate their offices at the end of two years, and those elected in districts bearing even numbers, at the end of four years; and vacancies occurring by the expiration of term shall be filled by the election of senators for the full term. Senatorial districts shall be formed of contiguous and compact territory, bounded by county lines, and contain as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants; but no district shall contain less than four-fifths of the senatorial ratio. Counties containing not less than the ratio and three-fourths, may be divided into separate districts, and shall be entitled to two Senators, and to one additional senator for each number of inhabitants equal to the ratio, contained by such counties in excess of twice the number of said ratio.

People ex rel. v. Thompson, 155 Ill., 451; People ex rel. v. Hutchinson, 172 Ill., 486; People ex rel. v. Carlock, 198 Ill., 150; see article vi, section 5.

Minority Representation

SECTIONS 7 AND 8. The House of Representatives shall consist of three times the number of the members of the Senate, and the term of office shall be two years. Three representatives shall be elected in each Senatorial district at the general election in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, and every two years thereafter. In all elections of representatives aforesaid, each qualified voter may cast as many votes for one candidate as there are representatives to be elected, or may distribute the same, or equal parts thereof, among the candidates, as he shall see fit; and the candidates highest in votes shall be declared elected.²

²Under the terms of section 12 of the schedule, original sections 7 and 8 of this article were to be eliminated if the section relating to minority representation, which was submitted to a separate vote, was adopted by the voters. The separate section was adopted and accordingly replaced original sections 7 and 8, which were as follows:

REPRESENTATIVE

"SECTION 7. The population of the State, as ascertained by the Federal census, shall be divided by the number one hundred and fifty-three, and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives. Every county or district shall be entitled to one representative, when its population is three-fifths of the ratio; if any county has less than three-fifths of the ratio, it shall be attached to the adjoining county having the least population, to which no other county has for the same reason been attached, and the two shall constitute a separate district. Every county or district having a population not less than the ratio and three-fifths, shall be entitled to two representatives, and for each additional number of inhabitants, equal to the ratio, one representative. Counties having over two hundred thousand inhabitants may be divided into districts, each entitled to not less than three nor more than five representatives. After the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty, the whole population shall be divided by the number one hundred and fifty-nine, and the quotient shall be the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives for the ensuing ten years, and six additional representatives shall be added for every five hundred thousand increase of population at each decennial census thereafter, and be apportioned in the same manner as above provided.

"SECTION 8. When a county or district shall have a fraction of population above what shall entitle it to one representative, or more, according to the provisions of the foregoing section, amounting to one-fifth of the ratio, it shall be entitled to one additional representative in the fifth term of each decennial period; when such fraction is two-fifths of the ratio, it shall be entitled to an additional representative in the fourth and fifth terms of said periods; when the fraction is three-fifths of the ratio, it shall be entitled to an additional representative in the first, second and third terms, respectively; when the fraction is four-fifths of the ratio, it shall be entitled to an additional representative in the first, second, third and fourth terms, respectively."

Time of Meeting and General Rules

SECTION 9. The sessions of the General Assembly shall commence at twelve o'clock noon, on the Wednesday next after the first Monday in January, in the year next ensuing the election of members thereof, and at no other time, unless as provided by this Constitution. A majority of the members elected to each house shall constitute a quorum. Each house shall determine the rules of its proceedings, and be the judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members; shall choose its own officers; and the Senate shall choose a temporary President to preside when the Lieutenant Governor shall not attend as President or shall act as governor. The Secretary of State shall call the House of Representatives to order at the opening of each new Assembly, and preside over it until a temporary presiding officer thereof shall have been chosen and shall have taken his seat. No member shall be expelled by either house, except by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to that house, and no member be twice expelled for the same offense. Each house may punish by imprisonment any person, not a member, who shall be guilty of disrespect to the house by disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence. But no such imprisonment shall extend beyond twenty-four hours at one time, unless the person shall persist in such disorderly or contemptuous behavior.

SECTION 10. The doors of each house and of committees of the whole shall be kept open, except in such cases as, in the opinion of the house, require secrecy. Neither house shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than two days, or to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting. Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, which shall be published. In the Senate at the request of two members, and in the House at the request of five members, the yeas and nays shall be taken on any question, and entered upon the journal. Any two members of either house shall have liberty to dissent from and protest, in respectful language, against any act or resolution which they think injurious to the public or to any individual, and have the reasons of their dissent entered upon the journals.

See People ex rel. v. Hatch, 33 Ill., 9; see article v, section 9.

Style of Laws, and Passage of Bills

SECTION 11. The style of the laws of this State shall be; "Be it enacted by the People of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly."

Burritt v. Commissioners of State Contracts, 120 Ill., 322; Pearce v. Vittum, 193 Ill., 192.

SECTION 12. Bills may originate in either house, but may be altered, amended or rejected by the other; and on the final passage of all bills, the vote shall be by yeas and nays, upon each bill separately, and shall be entered upon the journal; and no bill shall become a law without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected to each house.

SECTION 13. Every bill shall be read at large on three different days, in each house; and the bill and all amendments thereto shall be printed before the vote is taken on its final passage; and every bill, having passed both houses, shall be signed by the Speakers thereof. No act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed; and no law shall be revived or amended by reference to its title only, but the law revived, or the section amended, shall be inserted at length in the new act. And no act of the General Assembly shall take effect until the first day of July next after its passage, unless, in case of emergency, (which emergency shall be expressed in the preamble or body of the act), the General Assembly shall, by a vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house, otherwise direct.

If he approve, he shall sign it, and thereupon it shall become a law; but if he do not approve, he shall return it with his objections, to the House in which it shall have originated, which house shall enter the objections at large upon its journal and proceed to reconsider the bill. If then two-thirds of the members elected agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and if approved by two-thirds of the members elected to that house, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the Governor; but in all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays to be entered upon the journal.

Bills making appropriations of money out of the Treasury shall specify the objects and purposes for which the same are made, and appropriate to them respectively their several amounts in distinct items and sections, and if the Governor shall not approve any one or more of the items or sections contained in any bill, but shall approve the residue thereof, it shall become a law as to the residue in like manner as if he had signed it. The Governor shall then return the bill, with his objections to the items or sections of the same not approved by him, to the house in which the bill shall have originated, which house shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider so much of said bill as is not approved by the Governor. The same proceedings shall be had in both houses in reconsidering the same as is hereinbefore provided in case of an entire bill returned by the Governor with his objections; and if any item or section of said bill not approved by the Governor shall be passed by two-thirds of the members elected to each of the two houses of the General Assembly, it shall become part of said law notwithstanding the objections of the Governor. Any bill which shall not be returned by the Governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the General Assembly shall, by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall be filed with his objections, in the office of the Secretary of State, within ten days after such adjournment, or become a law.⁵

⁵As amended by the third amendment to the constitution. The amendment was proposed by resolution of the general assembly in 1883. It was ratified by the people on November 4, 1884, and proclaimed adopted on November 28, 1884. The section as it originally appeared is as follows:

"SECTION 16. Every bill passed by the General Assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approve, he shall sign it, and thereupon it shall become a law; but if he do not approve, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it shall have originated, which house shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If, then, two-thirds of the members elected agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and if approved by two-thirds of the members elected to that house, it shall become a law, notwithstanding the objections of the Governor. But in all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays, to be entered on the journal. Any bill which shall be returned by the Governor within ten days (Sundays excepted), after it shall have been presented to him, shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the General Assembly, by their adjournment, prevent its return; in which case it shall be filed with his objections, in the office of the Secretary of State, within ten days after such adjournment, or become a law."

Lieutenant Governor

SECTION 17. In case of the death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State, or other disability of the Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall be removed, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.

SECTION 18. The Lieutenant Governor shall be President of the Senate, and shall vote only when the Senate is equally divided. The Senate shall choose a President, pro tempore, to preside in case of the absence or impeachment of the Lieutenant Governor, or when he shall hold the office of Governor.

SECTION 19. If there be no Lieutenant Governor, or if the Lieutenant Governor shall, for any of the causes specified in section seventeen of this article, become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above named causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Other State Officers

SECTION 20. If the office of Auditor of Public Accounts, Treasurer, Secretary of State, Attorney General, or Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be vacated by death, resignation or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the Governor to fill the same by appointment, and the appointee shall hold his office until his successor shall be elected and qualified in such manner as may be provided by law. An account shall be kept by the officers of the Executive Department, and of all the public institutions of the State, of all moneys received or disbursed by them, severally, from all sources, and for every service performed, and a semi-annual report thereof be made to the Governor, under oath; and any officer who makes a false report shall be guilty of perjury, and punished accordingly.

SECTION 21. Whenever two-thirds of the members of each house of the General Assembly shall, by a vote entered upon the journals thereof, concur that a Convention is necessary to revise, alter or amend the constitution, the question shall be submitted to the electors at the next general election. If a majority voting at the election vote for a convention, the General Assembly shall, at the next session, provide for a convention, to consist of double the number of members of the Senate, to be elected in the same manner, at the same places, and in the same districts. The General Assembly shall, in the act calling the Convention, designate the day, hour and place of its meeting, fix the pay of its members and officers, and provide for the payment of the same, together with the expenses necessarily incurred by the convention in the performance of its duties. The qualification of members shall be the same as that of members of the Senate, and vacancies occurring shall be filled in the manner provided for filling vacancies in the General Assembly. Said Convention shall meet within three months after such election, and prepare such revision, alteration or amendments of the Constitution as shall be deemed necessary, which shall be submitted to the electors for their ratification or rejection, at an election appointed by the convention for that purpose, not less than two nor more than six months after the adjournment thereof; and unless so submitted and approved, by a majority of the electors voting at the election, no such revision, alterations or amendments shall take effect.

All power developed from said waterway may be leased in part or in whole, as the General Assembly may by law provide, but in the event of any lease being so executed, the rental specified therein for water power shall be subject to a revaluation each ten years of the term created, and the income therefrom shall be paid into the treasury of the State.¹⁰

If, upon canvassing the votes for and against the adoption of this Constitution, it shall appear that there has been polled a greater number of votes against than for it, then no certificates of election shall be issued for any of said Supreme or Circuit Judges.

SECTION 8. This Constitution shall be submitted to the people of the State of Illinois for adoption or rejection, at an election to be held on the first Saturday in July in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and there shall be separately submitted at the same time, for adoption or rejection, sections nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen and fifteen, relating to railroads, in the article entitled "Corporations;" the article entitled "Counties;" the article entitled "Warehouses;" the question of requiring a three-fifths vote to remove a county seat; the section relating to the Illinois Central Railroad; the section in relation to minority representation; the section relating to municipal subscriptions to railroads or private corporations; and the section relating to the Canal. Every person entitled to vote under the provisions of this Constitution, as defined in the article in relation to "Suffrage" shall be entitled to vote for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution, and for or against the articles, sections and question aforesaid, separately submitted; and the said qualified electors shall vote at the usual places of voting, unless otherwise provided; and the said election shall be conducted, and returns thereof made according to the laws now in force regulating general elections, except that no registry shall be required at said election: Provided, however, that the polls shall be kept open for the reception of ballots until sunset of said day of election.

SECTION 9. The Secretary of State shall, at least twenty days before said election, cause to be delivered to the County Clerk of each county blank poll-books, tally lists and forms of return, and twice the number of properly prepared printed ballots for the said election that there are voters in such county, the expense whereof shall be audited and paid as other public printing ordered by the Secretary of State is, by law, required to be audited and paid; and the several county clerks shall, at least five days before said election, cause to be distributed to the board of election, in each election district in their respective counties, said blank poll-books, tally-lists, forms of return, and tickets

SECTION 10. At the said election the ballots shall be in the following form:

NEW CONSTITUTION TICKET

For all the propositions on this ticket which are not cancelled with ink or pencil; and against all propositions which are so cancelled.

For the new Constitution.

For the sections relating to railroads in the article entitled "Corporations."

For the article entitled "Counties."

For the article entitled "Warehouses."

For a three-fifths vote to remove County Seats.

For the section relating to the Illinois Central Railroad.

For the section relating to Minority Representation.

For the section relating to Municipal Subscriptions to Railroads or Private Corporations.

For the section relating to the Canal.

Each of said tickets shall be counted as a vote cast for each proposition thereon not cancelled with ink or pencil, and against each proposition so cancelled, and returns thereof shall be made accordingly by the judges of election.

SECTION 11. The returns of the whole vote cast, and of the votes for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution, and for or against the articles and sections respectively submitted, shall be made by the several county clerks, as is now provided by law, to the Secretary of State, within twenty days after the election; and the returns of the said votes shall, within five days thereafter, be examined and canvassed by the Auditor, Treasurer and Secretary of State, or any two of them, in the presence of the Governor, and proclamation shall be made by the Governor, forthwith, of the result of the canvass.

SECTION 12. If it shall appear that a majority of the votes polled are "For the New Constitution," then so much of this Constitution as was not separately submitted to be voted on by articles and sections, shall be the supreme law of the State of Illinois, on and after Monday the eighth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy; but if it shall appear that a majority of the votes polled were "Against the New Constitution," then so much thereof as was not separately submitted to be voted on by articles and sections, shall be null and void.

If it shall appear that a majority of the votes polled, are "for the sections relating to Railroads in the article entitled "Corporations"; sections nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen and fifteen, relating to Railroads in the said article, shall be a part of the Constitution of this State; but if a majority of said votes are against such sections, they shall be null and void. If a majority of the votes polled are for the article entitled "Counties," such article shall be part of the Constitution of this State and shall be substituted for article seven, in the present Constitution entitled "Counties"; but if a majority of said votes are against such article, the same shall be null and void. If a majority of the votes polled are "for the article entitled "Warehouses," such article shall be part of the Constitution of this State, but if a majority of the votes are against said article, the same shall be null and void. If a majority of the votes polled are for either of the sections separately submitted, relating respectively, to the "Illinois Central Railroad," "Minority Representation," "Municipal Subscriptions to Railroads or Private Corporations," and the "Canal," then such of said sections as shall receive such majority shall be a part of the Constitution of this State; but each of said sections so separately submitted against which, respectively, there shall be a majority of the votes polled, shall be null and void: Provided, that the section relating to "Minority Representation," shall not be declared adopted unless the portion of the Constitution not separately submitted to be voted on by articles and sections shall be adopted, and in case said section relating to "Minority Representation" shall become a portion of the Constitution, it shall be substituted for sections seven and eight of the Legislative Article. If a majority of the votes cast at such election shall be for a three-fifths vote to remove a county seat, then the words "a majority" shall be stricken out of section four of the Article on Counties, and the words "three-fifths" shall be inserted in lieu thereof; and the following words shall be added to said section, to-wit: "But when an attempt is made to remove a county seat to a point nearer to the center of a county, then a majority vote only shall be necessary." If the foregoing proposition shall not receive a majority of the votes, as aforesaid, then the same shall have no effect whatever.

SECTION 13. Immediately after the adoption of this Constitution, the Governor and Secretary of State shall proceed to ascertain and fix the apportionment of the State for members of the first House of Representatives under this Constitution. The apportionment shall be based upon the Federal census of the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy of the State of Illinois, and shall be made strictly in accordance with the rules and principles announced in the article on the Legislative Department of this Constitution: Provided, that in case the Federal census aforesaid can not be ascertained prior to Friday, the twenty-third day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, then the said apportionment shall be based on the State census of the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, in accordance with the rules and principles aforesaid. The Governor shall, on or before Wednesday, the twenty-eighth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, make official announcement of the said apportionment, under the great seal of the State; and one hundred copies thereof, duly certified, shall be forthwith transmitted by the Secretary of State to each county clerk for distribution.

SECTION 14. The districts shall be regularly numbered, by the Secretary of State, commencing with Alexander County as Number One, and proceeding then northwardly through the State, and terminating with the county of Cook; but no county shall be numbered as more than one district, except the county of Cook, which shall constitute three districts, each embracing the territory contained in the now existing representative districts of said county. And on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, the members of the first House of Representatives under this Constitution shall be elected according to the apportionment fixed and announced as aforesaid, and shall hold their offices for two years, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

SECTION 15. The Senate, at its first session under this Constitution, shall consist of fifty members, to be chosen as follows: At the General Election held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, two Senators shall be elected in districts where the term of Senators expire on the first Monday of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, or where there shall be a vacancy, and in the remaining districts one Senator shall be elected. Senators so elected shall hold their office two years.

SECTION 16. The General Assembly, at its first session held after the adoption of this Constitution, shall proceed to apportion the State for members of the Senate and House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of the article on the Legislative Department.

SECTION 17. When this constitution shall be ratified by the people, the Governor shall forthwith, after having ascertained the fact, issue writs of election to the sheriffs of the several counties of this State, or in case of vacancies, to the coroners, for the election of all the officers, the time of whose election is fixed by this constitution or schedule, and it shall be the duty of said sheriffs or coroners to give such notice of the time and place of said election as is now prescribed by law.

SECTION 18. All laws of the State of Illinois, and all official writings, and the Executive, Legislative and Judicial proceedings, shall be conducted, preserved and published in no other than the English language.

SECTION 20. The circuit clerks of the different counties having a population over sixty thousand, shall continue to be Recorders (ex officio) for their respective counties, under this constitution, until the expiration of their respective terms.

SECTION 21. The judges of all courts of record in Cook county shall, in lieu of any salary provided for in this Constitution, receive the compensation now provided by law until the adjournment of the first session of the General Assembly after the adoption of this Constitution.

People ex rel. v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 64 Ill., 82.

SECTION 22. The present judge of the circuit court of Cook county shall continue to hold the circuit court of Lake county until otherwise provided by law.

SECTION 23. When this constitution shall be adopted, and take effect as the supreme law of the State of Illinois, the two-mill tax provided to be annually assessed and collected upon each dollar's worth of taxable property, in addition to all other taxes, as set forth in article fifteen of the now existing constitution, shall cease to be assessed after the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy.

SECTION 24. Nothing contained in this Constitution shall be so construed as to deprive the General Assembly of power to authorize the city of Quincy to create any indebtedness for railroad or municipal purposes for which the people of said city shall have voted and to which they shall have given, by such vote, their assent, prior to the thirteenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand and eight hundred and sixty-nine: Provided, that no such indebtedness, so created, shall, in any part thereof be paid by the State, or from any State revenue tax or fund, but the same shall be paid, if at all, by the said city of Quincy alone, and by taxes to be levied upon the taxable property thereof; and provided, further, that the General Assembly shall have no power in the premises, that it could not exercise under the present constitution of this State.

See separate section relating to municipal subscriptions to railroads or private corporations.

SECTION 25. In case this Constitution, and the articles and sections submitted separately, be adopted, the existing Constitution shall cease in all its provisions, and in case this Constitution be adopted, and any one or more of the articles or sections submitted separately be defeated, the provisions of the existing constitution, if any, on the same subject shall remain in force.¹³

"In the original manuscript the word "force" appears "forced."

SECTION 26. The provisions of this constitution required to be executed prior to the adoption or rejection thereof shall take effect and be in force immediately.¹⁴ ¹The Constitution of 1870 contains five separate sections. Four of these separate sections were submitted and adopted at the same time as the complete constitution. The separate section relating to convict labor was adopted as an amendment to the constitution in 1886. Under the terms of section 12 of the schedule the separate section relating to minority representation, if adopted, was to be substituted for sections 7 and 8 of article iv.

While the original separate sections are not designated by numbers it has been deemed necessary for the purposes of this index, to number them. In this index the separate section relating to the Illinois Central railroad is designated as separate section 1; the separate section relating to minority representation is considered separate section 2; that relating to municipal subscriptions to railroads or private corporations is designated separate section 3; that relating to the canal as separate section 4; and that relating to convict labor as separate section 5.

In the text of the Constitution of 1870, as it appears in this volume, the separate section relating to minority representation, having been adopted, appears as sections 7 and 8 of article iv, and in this index all references concerning minority representation are made to sections 7 and 8 of article iv. But, since the section relating to minority representation, in the original document, appears as the second separate section, it was thought best, in dealing with the separate sections, to permit that section to be considered as separate section 2 and to designate the following separate section as separate section 3.
